The AJP has four core values: Kindness, Equality, Rationality and Non-violence. These determine how the AJP will protect the rights of Australian workers. Broadly, we seek to promote the personal freedom, wellbeing and security of all humans and other animals. The AJP opposes all forms of exploitation and therefore supports employment conditions that respect workers for their humanity and not merely their productive output. We also recognise the value of workplace unions and the need to provide Australians with meaningful work and financial security.

The AJP believes that the economy must be restructured in accordance with our key principles. We will promote workers' rights and environmental protection over short-term corporate profits. Furthermore, many of the AJP's goals for animals and the environment will be more achievable when our human population is itself free from exploitation.
